

Craigavon Integrated Development Framework

Executive Summary

July 2010

About the CIDF

The Craigavon Integrated Development Framework was commissioned in January 2009 by the Department for Social Development and Craigavon Borough Council to set out the basis for the future growth and development of Central Craigavon, Lurgan and Portadown town centres.

This CIDF is an important step in dealing with the challenges faced by the three town centres. It shows how Central Craigavon, Lurgan and Portadown can benefit from a co-ordinated and integrated approach to development and regeneration. In addition, it details what this means for each centre.

What it does mean is a complementary alliance of lively and welcoming centres, accessible to all. It means that the whole range of facilities will be available locally and that business will want to invest in our town centres.

It means that the future in Craigavon will be a better place.

The most important part of the document is the Implementation and Delivery Plan. This sets out exactly how we will make the change, with specific responsibilities for particular organisations. It demonstrates how serious we are about transforming our centres, and just how the vision will be made a reality.

The purpose of the Craigavon Integrated Development Framework (CIDF) is to guide how the three town centres of Central Craigavon, Lurgan and Portadown will develop and thrive over the next 20 years.

The preparation of the CIDF was closely informed by a specially formed Advisory Group that comprises stakeholders (including representation from Lurgan Forward and Portadown 2000), landowners, Councillors, and senior officers from the Council and the Department for Social Development. The process has been built around this focused group, with meetings being held in April, June, July and August 2009 and February 2010 to ensure that the views and needs of each of the town centres were taken into account.

The document headlines are set out below.

THE CIDF HEADLINES

The key recommendations in this document are as follows:

“3C” – the 3 centres as the complete package:

- Between the three town centres, there will be the complete range of commercial, social, cultural and community activities.
- The centres will capitalise on the heritage and open space assets that they have.
- The town centres will be well connected with one another and easy to access by foot, cycle, public transport and car.
- The town centres will work together in ways that benefit them all.
- The town centres will be the focus for economic development.
- The renewal of each town will be marked by a flagship regeneration scheme.

The individual town centres:

- Central Craigavon:
 - expansion to include ‘big’ retail and leisure (of a scale that will not be attracted to Lurgan or Portadown)
 - civic offices
 - better links with surrounding communities
- Lurgan:
 - a bustling but relaxed traditional market town centre in a pleasant setting
 - independent retailers and cafes as well as chains
 - nurturing an arts and crafts niche
- Portadown:
 - mix of local and national retailers
 - culture and leisure
 - riverside living, working and relaxing

Overall, around £22M of investment in the centres is identified in the Action Plan at the end of the CIDF.

About the CIDF

Increased competition and likely reductions in public spending mean it is vital that the three town centres work together now.

Set out below is why the CIDF is so important to the future of the three town centres.

A GOLDEN OPPORTUNITY – WHY THE CIDF IS SO IMPORTANT

- It shows how the three centres can work together to their mutual benefit.
- It will influence external investment decisions, by public agencies and the private sector.
- It demonstrates to everybody – residents, businesses, people and organisations based elsewhere – that Craigavon is serious about regeneration and change.
- It offers guidance to developers and agencies on the high expectations that we have for change and how we can help to achieve them.
- It provides the Council with an implementation-focused strategic plan that can be used as a delivery mechanism.
- It adds weight to the regeneration plans started in the Portadown and Lurgan Development Frameworks.
- It reduces the danger of the Craigavon centres being left behind by other places, each of which have their own plans.
- It focuses on the town centres, which are the most accessible, sustainable and inclusive (with opportunities for “shared spaces”) of all locations.
- It recognises that the problems are serious but not insurmountable.

The Vision

The CIDF has an integrated vision for the three centres, which has been carefully developed and shaped by the CIDF Advisory Group, and forms the bedrock of the strategy. The vision has multiple purposes, which are:

- To provide a shared understanding of where we collectively want to get to.
- To provide a tool for assessing individual development proposals and more strategic regeneration plans when they come forward – they should be discouraged if they are not contributing towards delivering the vision.
- To establish the relative future roles of the three centres – how they can function in a co-ordinated way for the benefit of the population of Craigavon as a whole.
- To provide a strategic, stakeholder-endorsed context for public and private sector decision making, such as decisions on investment and policy.
- To help to maximise value from individual sites by demonstrating how they fit into a wider improvement programme

The vision is that:

In 2020, the three centres of Portadown, Lurgan and Central Craigavon will be a focus for investment, fitting for Northern Ireland's fourth-largest urban area. Craigavon will have three complementary and successful centres all with a unique offer within Northern Ireland, each having a distinct role and identity, and each benefiting from a greatly enhanced environment and range of facilities. Craigavon will have forged a reputation as a place with the full retail, leisure and office offer. People will enjoy visiting the centres to spend time and shop, and this will support a range of commercial, social, cultural, and community activities. The distinctiveness of the individual centres will provide an offer for the Craigavon urban area as a whole (and beyond) that is greater than the sum of the parts. The centres will have transformed the image of Craigavon into a place that looks forward with confidence and optimism, leaving the legacy of the Troubles behind; a place where people actively choose to live, shop and spend their leisure time, and businesses choose to invest.

Each of the three centres will perform a distinct role:

Portadown will be a thriving traditional town centre, with a rich mix of local and national retailers, places to eat, relax and sample culture, and modern office accommodation. People will be living in the town centre. A rediscovered and rejuvenated riverside area will have become a location for modern, flagship mixed use development, centred around leisure and town centre living. The town will have become a regional public transport interchange, focused on Portadown station, attracting people from a wide area without over-reliance on car travel.

Lurgan will be a vibrant traditional town centre with a reputation based on an exemplary variety of local independent retailers, businesses, restaurants, bars and facilities (although not to the exclusion of national chains) that attract shoppers and visitors from near and far whilst catering for the day-to-day needs of the local population. People will come to Lurgan for a relaxed shopping and leisure experience, with a reputation for arts and crafts, food and clothes. There will be a range of places to work and live, all within a convivial setting that makes the most of the park and lake, linking them to the High Street. The town centre environment will be enhanced, attracting people to enjoy time there. The town centre, with a variety of businesses, will be the place of work for many local people.

Like Portadown and Lurgan, Central Craigavon will continue to be an economic driver for the region. Its shops, leisure facilities, offices and services will continue to be typically larger than those found in the traditional town centres, but will be integrated with the immediate catchment areas. It will be set in a green environment offering outdoor recreation for the people who live there, visitors and employees. Its character will have changed to be attractive to all users, not just those with cars, and developments will have been planned to create a stronger sense of place and to make the centre more readily accessible. It will play its full part in strengthening the overall offer of the three centres, and further developments will be managed to achieve this goal. Each of the centres will be:

- Well-connected by foot, cycle, public transport and car.
- Linked by a fast, high quality bus rapid transit corridor.
- Easy and pleasant to walk about.
- Welcoming to visitors, with a unique offer to tourists.
- Neutral places to be enjoyed by all, regardless of background.

The Vision

- Able to accommodate and support a variety of businesses.
- Attractive places in which to live, work and invest.
- Noted for their heritage and/or quality of environment.
- Seen as exemplars of town centre development and regeneration.
- Environmentally sustainable.
- Places to make those living around them proud, with something for everyone.
- Boosted by a flagship regeneration scheme.

Craigavon's centres will have been reborn as the result of working together to implement a series of carefully co-ordinated interventions, some of them quite small, but all of them working towards a common understanding that they are stronger together.

Integration

The “integration” is just as important as the “vision”. A co-ordinated strategy is the only option. Each of the three centres ploughing their own furrows could result in a number of scenarios, none of which would benefit the wider Craigavon population. Perhaps the most likely would be continued decline for Lurgan and Portadown, which would be unacceptable.

There are many positive reasons for pursuing this co-ordinated strategy and vision. They include the following:

- Only together can the three centres provide the complete offer. There is nowhere near enough demand for shops, services and facilities to expect each centre to be able to provide everything. Only by viewing the centres as inter-related hubs in a single catchment, combining the respective “mini-catchments” to achieve a critical mass, can a higher level of services than currently exists be justified.
- The three centres genuinely are complementary. Each has something different to offer, and each can exploit its own niches. They can become even more complementary. We can call this concept “3C” – one Craigavon, with three distinct but closely linked town centres.
- Some necessary interventions can only function effectively on a three-centre basis. For example, a public transport strategy and a tourism strategy have to operate at a strategic level.

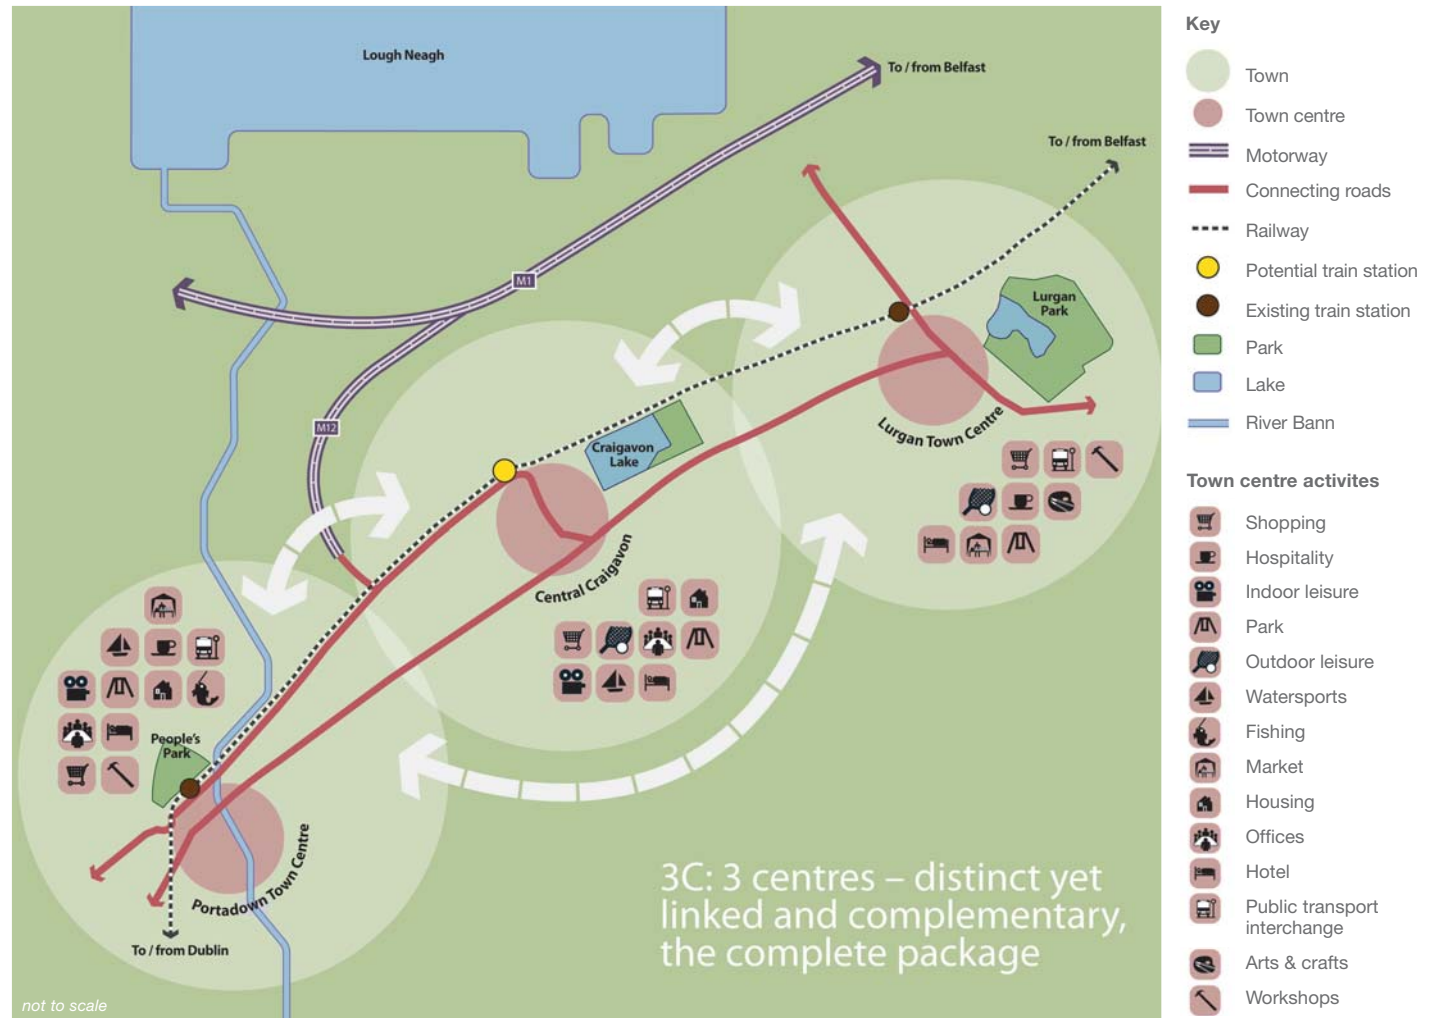

- A united front needs to be presented to potential investors. They will need confidence that the centres can work together. An “us against them” attitude will drag us all down.
- At a practical level, and in a period of squeezed public finances, achieving economies of scale and sharing resources makes sound sense. For example, each of the three centres would find it more difficult to support their own town centre management operations than feed off a shared structure for all the centres.
- The Review of Public Administration (RPA) was set up by the Northern Ireland Executive in 2002 to help modernise and reform the public sector. As part of this review, the number of councils in Northern Ireland will be reduced and will be given extra responsibilities and powers. Under the review Craigavon will become part of a wider structure with Armagh and Banbridge, and a co-ordinated voice promoting the regeneration needs of Central Craigavon, Lurgan and Portadown will be much more effective and better heard than three smaller voices.

Three Strong Centres

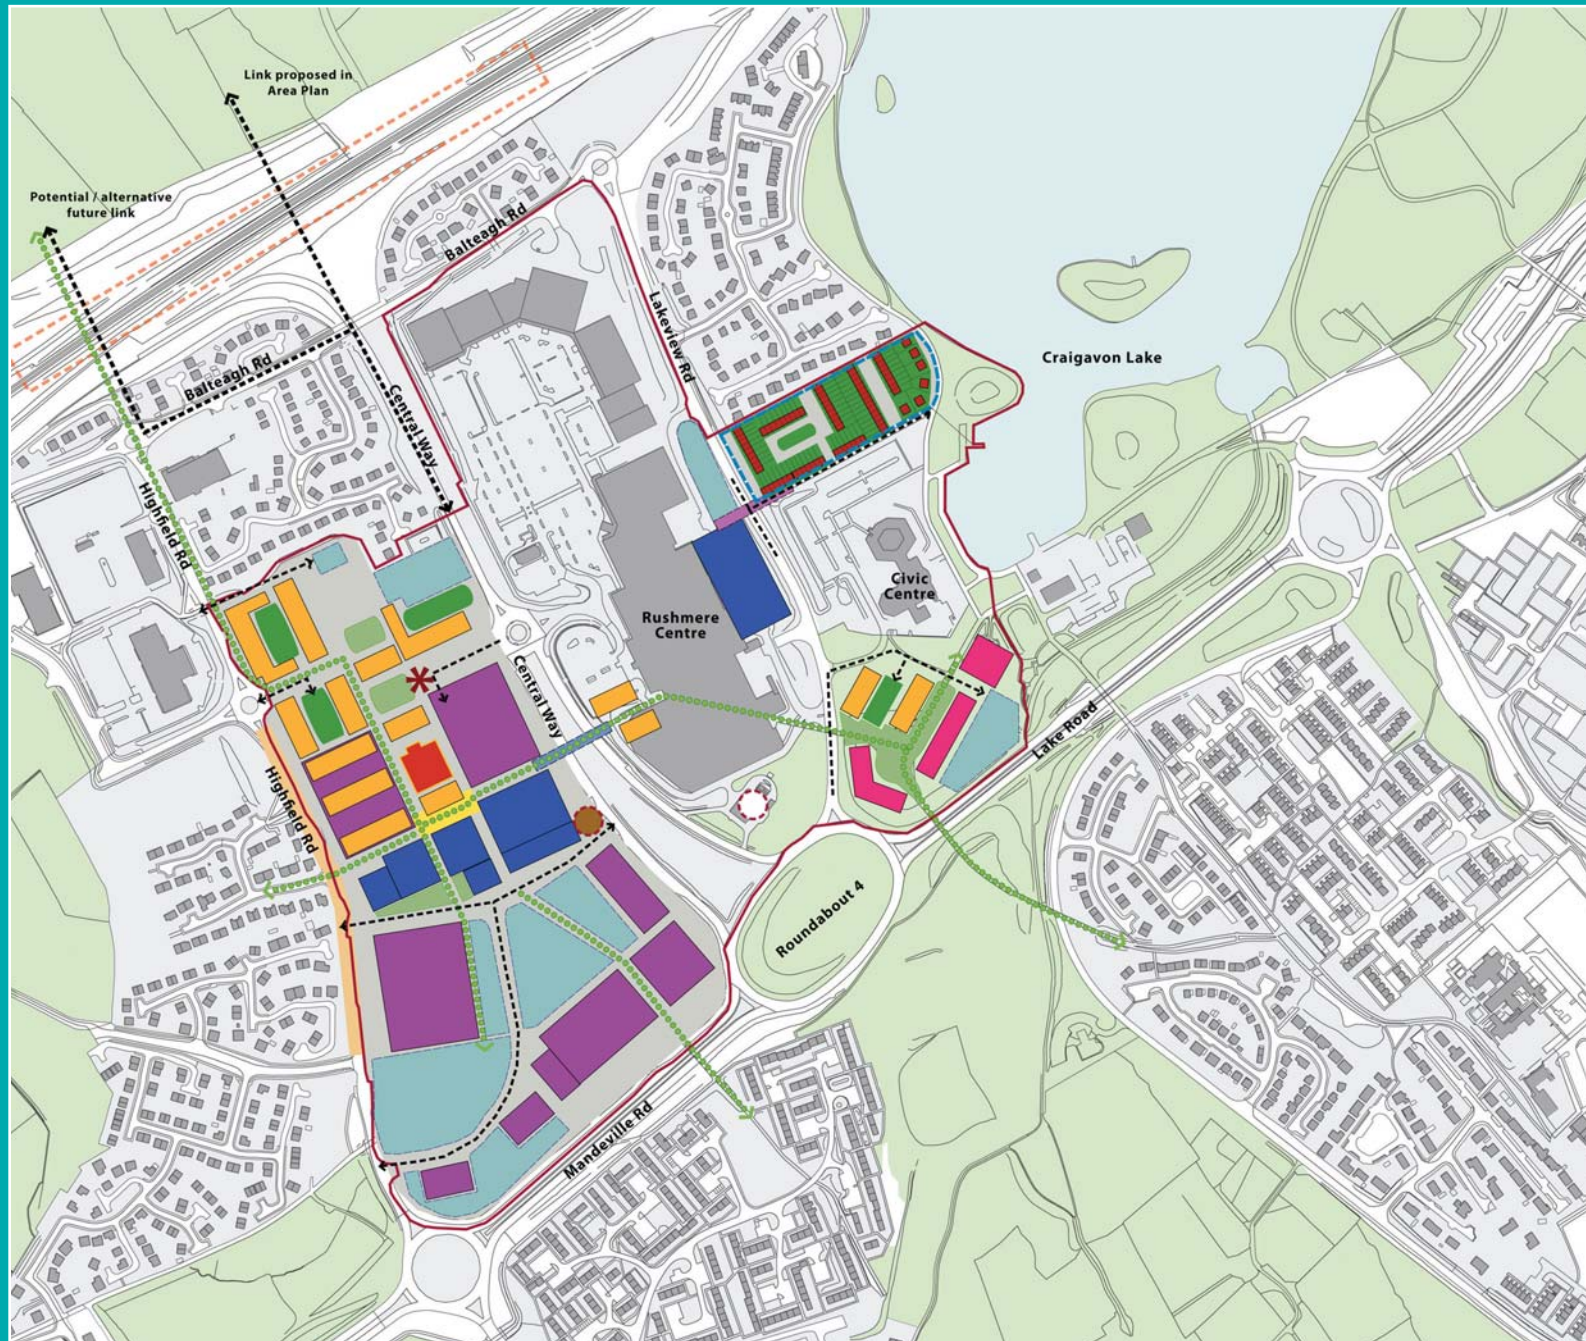

Within the CIDF, a Masterplan for each of the centres illustrates not only the development sites available, but also how they should best be developed in line with the goals of the CIDF as well as in an integrated manner.

The diagram below illustrates the relationship between the three centres. It is clear there is an overlap in the offer of the towns; however each can develop a niche for itself as part of a complete offer for people, living, working and visiting the borough.

Implementation and Delivery

Given the many public sector powers, resources and assets that will still lie outside the Council (even after RPA), the development of a specific regeneration public partnership structure is likely to be the most effective way to achieve the collaborative, co-ordinated, strategic approach and necessary leadership to bring about delivery. The strengthening of public partnership working across the council area can help to deliver improvements to the town centres. The CIDF recommends the creation of a new public regeneration partnership to be known as the Craigavon Integrated Regeneration Partnership (CIRP). The role and structure of the proposed partnership is laid out below.

Craigavon Integrated Regeneration Partnership
Role and Remit	To focus and drive regeneration efforts (including implementation of the CIDF) across the Borough by co-ordinating and focussing the public sector agencies (and their resources) on the identified and agreed regeneration priorities.
Structure	Partnership structure working to clearly defined set of objectives and targets. The partnership members will set the objectives and targets (based upon the identified and agreed regeneration priorities – e.g. the CIDF and the town centre frameworks) and ‘sign up’ to supporting their delivery. The partnership will be public sector led, as the focus is on ensuring that public sector resources and interventions address regeneration priorities. It will report progress to the Council on a regular basis. Importantly there will be guidance from local private sector stakeholders built into the structure (and possible continuation of the CIDF Advisory Group as a ‘Critical Friend’). This is to ensure that the partnership remains cognisant of, and responsive to, the private sector. Information will flow in both directions between local stakeholder groups and the partnership.
Membership	The key members, of which there should be a maximum of 12, and their respective roles within the partnership will be as follows: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Local and senior politicians – Their role will be to provide leadership and direction to the partnership. The influence, authority and mandate to ensure that all the key public sector agencies engage as necessary with the partnership and the delivery of its targets and objectives. They will also bring accountability and a mandate for decision making; • Local leads and senior decision makers from public sector agencies – Their role will be to report to partnership on the relevant work, resources and strategies of their agency and to work with the partnership to achieve its objectives. The exact membership is to be determined by the partnership, but it is felt that it should include DSD, DRD, Roads Service, DoE, Planning Service, NIHE, NIR/Translink, SHSSB; • Key council officers – Their role will also be to report to partnership relevant work, resources and strategies of the Council and to work with the partnership to achieve its objectives. They will also service, support and facilitate the partnership in undertaking its work, as well as monitor/chase progress on delivery on behalf of the partnership.
Actions	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The partnership will drive, guide and deliver regeneration across the Borough by: • Setting regeneration priorities and targets (with reference to existing agreed strategies and priorities, and to private sector needs) • Ensuring where possible that the strategies and investment decisions of public agencies reflect and work towards those priorities and targets. • Overseeing and co-ordinating delivery of these regeneration priorities and targets, by driving and monitoring progress.

Conclusion

Craigavon's three centres are alive with opportunity, but can be radically improved for the benefit of all local residents and businesses.

The CIDF sets out a wide array of specific projects. These will make a real difference. They will no less than transform the three centres, attracting many millions of pounds of investment and putting Central Craigavon, Lurgan and Portadown on the map for positive reasons.

To summarise, the recurrent themes running through the Craigavon Integrated Development Framework are that:

- The town centres of Central Craigavon, Lurgan and Portadown now have an excellent opportunity for development and regeneration by working in a coordinated manner.
- An integrated vision is in place to provide a shared understanding of where we are heading.
- As part of the integrated vision, there are a set of site-specific actions that will help to transform each town centre.
- Implementation is paramount, and the action plan sets out clear responsibilities for making sure that the vision becomes a reality via a host of individual projects.

It is now for the public authorities and a range of partners in the private sector to work together to show that the CIDF really can make the difference and the town centres meet their full potential.

The CIDF has been prepared in a time of recession. But recovery is now underway. The conditions are re-emerging for investment to flow. It is down to the public authorities to put into place the conditions to encourage the rejuvenation and rediscovery of the town centres. The CIDF shows how. Now it is time for action.
